

The Grande Anse light house in New Brunswick was originally built in 1917. The lighthouse that stands today is considered a faux lighthouse in so much as it is not operational. The building is fun because it is painted in the colours of the Acadians and houses an information centre.

